

BALI WILD WEST TOUR

Gilimanuk Harbour: This is the transit point for the ferry between Bali and Java, it's a 25-minutes trip across the Java strait to Ketapang. Palasari Catholic Church: Northwest of Negara, in the village of Palasari, there is the largest Catholic Church in Eastern Indonesia. In the 1930s, Balinese who converted to Christianity, were sometimes exiled from their own villages. To relieve the pressure, entire Christian communities, such as that of Palasari, were established in the wilds of west Bali. Pura Rambut Siwi: There are a number of temples throughout Bali that commemorate miraculous events in the life of the 16th century priest, Danghyang Nirartha. The temple contains a relic, a curl of the sage's hair (rambut) which is being venerated here. Bunut Bolong: The sacred tree is situated on the ridge of a hill, on the east side flanked by a clove plantation and on the west side by a gorge with excellent lush green tropical forrest. The name Bunut Bolong is given due to the unique characteristic of this tree. The word "bunut" is the Balinese name for a species of fig which has similar characteristic with banyan tree. Bolong means "hole" - the diameter of the hole can accommodate two cars side by side. The road through the Bunut Bolong tree was build since it is impossible to built the road either on the right or the left side of the tree. Moreover, cutting down the tree was out of question since the spirits that reside in the tree refuse to move out from the tree. The set of shrines that accompany this sacred tree is known as Pujangga Sakti Temple that is established to honor the great sage Dang Hyang Sidhi Mantra who passed this area hundreds of years ago. Pupuan: The luxuriant farmland around Pupuan, pleasantly cool at around 2.600 feet above the sea level, produces much of Bali's most sought-after organically grown vegetables.
